

Jonathan Kiing

This mission' s trip has shown me many things. Observing what life is like in a developing country has shown me how God can still work in someone' s life. It was very interesting watching how God works in different settings and cultures, like how the school makes the students do devotions multiple times a day and memorize bible verses. I am thankful that God has helped me get through this missions trip, even though it did not turn out as smoothly as I thought. God has definitely revealed new things and gave me experiences that I will not forget. I believe that this first mission' s trip was a test from God, to see if I can handle his work by going to different places. After all of my experiences from this trip, I would believe that I passed his "test" . I am eager to do more mission' s work. We didn' t endure the many hardships missionaries experience, but it still had its difficulties. One of the main problems I experienced was that I did not allow God to help me adjust to the changes and sudden workload that was placed on me, and the stress from everything clouded my judgement, which didn't work out so well. I had a hard time letting God help me because I lead myself through life all the time, and I question my faith from time to time. But I realized that I can't contradict myself in life if I am to ever function properly. I cannot answer my own questions with 100% certainty if I do not even trust my own answers. By letting God lead my life, it will make it so that I can be 100% certain about these answers and will make my faith strong.

Jonathan is 20 years old now and studying engineering at Simon Fraser university.