

Priscilla Kwong

Going to Thailand has been the most eye-opening experience of my life. This trip was really an act of God, since there was a period of time where I wasn't planning to go.

Things weren't always easy in Thailand. There were days where we battled hundreds of bugs. Moments where our team didn't agree with each other, times our students didn't listen. But, in hindsight, all those "difficult" things we experienced only served to strengthen us. From the bugs, we learned to face our fears. From our disagreements, we learned conflict resolution skills. From our students, we learned how to become better leaders. Our hardships became blessings — because from our hard experiences, we saw our weaknesses and felt God working through us.

It's hard to use words to describe how fulfilling this trip was. How much God taught me. Thailand has changed me, and I hope God will bring me back.

